

The native side is two populations: one in the state, one in the professions

The 88 Muslim and 42 Jewish natives, split. Both are natives in the sense this coding means — beylical subjects, not French citizens or protected foreigners — and on that axis the volume treats them alike. Everything else differs. Muslims hold more decorations (p = 0.045) and nearly three times the share of the Légion d'honneur, and their careers sit in the beylical administration; Jewish careers sit in medicine, law and commerce, and almost never in the native state. Reading 'native' as one interest here would be a mistake; with groups this small, read the occupational shares as shape, not quantity.
