

The Islamic institutions educate Tunisians only — the French ones educate both

Share of each community's institution mentions, by kind. Zitouna, the Khaldounia and the Collège Sadiki account for 16% of the 193 Tunisian mentions and for none at all of the 676 European ones, while every French institution on the chart carries both communities. The nearest thing to a shared credential is the école normale, where the two shares are within half a point — close enough that the dots are nudged apart to stay visible.

