

Forty-one people each share a body with forty of the others

People surviving a peel to each depth in the co-membership giant component (747 people). At k the chart counts everyone still holding k neighbours once all shallower nodes are stripped away, so the bars fall as the requirement tightens. The 32-core — the deepest layer that survives at all — holds 33 people. A group that dense is partly an artefact of projection, since one committee of forty-one makes every pair of its members adjacent at a stroke.
