

Eighty people hold four fifths of this network together

The largest surviving component as people are removed from the co-membership giant (747 people), by two orders. Taken at random, 80 removals leave 82% of the network intact. Taken in order of betweenness, the same number leaves 24%. This is the ordinary fragility of a network with hubs rather than anything peculiar to 1912 — but it does mean that conclusions about this elite's cohesion rest on how a few dozen notices were read.
