

Both states decorated both sides at the same rate

755 colonists and 144 natives — everyone the coding places, not only those in the network, since an honour does not depend on a tie. Nothing here separates the two sides. The nearest thing to a gap is the French Légion d'honneur, which the native side holds more often, not less ($p = 0.106$). The beylical order reaches a clear majority of both. Whatever the colonial line organised in 1912 Tunisia, the distribution of decorations among the people this volume chose to print is not it.
