

The native administration is a career ladder with almost no colonists on it

Primary occupation as a share of each side, for the people the volume gives one to, ordered by the size of the gap. The largest is the beylical and local administration — caids, khalifas, cadis and the councils around them — which is 17% of native careers and 1% of colonist ones. The French army runs the other way, 6 points heavier on the colonist side. The professions in between — law, medicine, teaching, commerce — are shared almost evenly. The line divides the state, not the market.
